

The Master Key to Success

a 2-day workshop based on international frameworks & methodologies

The difference between failure and success is doing a thing nearly right and doing a thing exactly right – Edward Simmons

Alignment of individual needs to organizational needs is a key ingredient for both the employee and the organization's success.

Very often, unfortunately though, even after the business needs and organizational goals are clear, the ownership of the same does not happen at the employee level. This workshop aims at being a first step towards that end.

Unless they know what their goals are, and how motivated they are to achieve the same, how can they be motivated to explore and realize how the organization's growth can fuel their own?

Failure to be success oriented breeds lethargy, cynicism and time wasting activities like indulging in office politics.

A success oriented employee is self motivated, always thinking win-win, and contributing beyond his/her required job description.
